Over the last two years, students from TU Delft elective course Architectural Ethnography examined the type of housing, daily life, and living environment of residents in Bouwlust en Vrederust, Moerwijk and Ypenburg.

The students observed the spaces in these neighbourhoods, collected qualitative and quantitative data, and engaged in conversations with residents about their everyday life and how they experience the neighborhood around them.

Using different types of written and visual media, from infographics, to videos and graphic novels, the students created a vast range of research outputs that show a different perspective of the life in the city of The Hague, bringing to light unexpected experiences and untold stories of residents in Bouwlust en Vrederust, Moerwijk and Ypenburg.
